

For people living with Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD)...

Share Your Stories for a Better Understanding of ASD

Living with ASD may present several different challenges for you as you go about your daily activities. Sometimes medications can be developed to alleviate some of these challenges. Clinical trials, which are studies designed to help find new treatments and medications, aren't usually designed with the needs of people living with ASD in mind. A company that is planning to develop a potential new medicine for ASD wants to learn from you to better understand your needs and experiences to improve clinical trials for ASD treatments.

If you've been diagnosed with ASD, or are a family member supporting someone with ASD, we want your insights and perspective—the stories you have to tell. So we're hosting a meeting where we can brainstorm and work together to improve the clinical trial experience for people living with ASD.

MEETING DETAILS:

- Occurs at The Carlyle hotel: 35 East 76th Street, New York, New York 10021 on March 1st and 2nd, 2017
 - Welcome dinner on Wednesday, March 1st at 6pm
 - The session runs on Thursday, March 2nd from 8am to 2pm
- Open to adults 18 and older with ASD and family members supporting an adult living with ASD
 - Adults with ASD can attend with their family member/support partner or on their own
 - Family members/support partners can attend with the adult with ASD they're supporting or on their own
- All expenses will be paid, and all travel and lodging arrangements - if required - will be made for you
